I have been here at Valdosta State University for about a year and a half, I am a transfer student from California and coming from a big city to a small town took a little time to adjust. My first experience at Valdosta State University the fall of 2012 was amazing, of course I had my ups and down but I knew what I wanted to do with my education and I am glad that I was honored to meet the faculty of sociology and I love their enthusiasm the teachers at Valdosta State University make you want to learn new things and explore the world in a different point of view. What I like about VSU was that when I first came here I was welcome and I did not feel like an outsider, it made me feel like I was at home just like in California. Another good thing about VSU is that everything around the school is attainable like if you want to go to the other side of the campus or to your dorm rooms they have shuttle buses to help you reach your destination. Coming here to VSU has opened my eyes in a different way I saw a different lifestyle and a different culture that I have never seen, but I am glad that my presence here has made an impact on my life and others as well and I have made many great new friends that I will cherish. All In all I think that I made a great choice to attend Valdosta State University.
